Organizing events that bring people together is a great idea, but it requires to have a place to do it. Social Networking has made the need to meet up much more common than before. In the last years it has become very easy to create a group of your friends or even a whole community and then connect to each other whenever you want through the Internet, exchanging messages and opinions on the web. Those kind of meetings are called Social Events. With Social Events, people can connect in their local area or from around the world. For this reason, Facebook Groupware has been created, enabling the user to create a group as an online Social Event, with no hardware or software installations required. But the problem is that in a typical network, you can only communicate with a small number of people at any time. And since people can join and leave the group at any time, it is hard to communicate at conferences, outdoor events, or business gatherings where people are constantly changing. The Hello! Event Organizer allows to organize a whole social event for your community with a simple setup. Every year, you'll get two different calendar widgets (one for the primary organizer, and one for the secondary organizers) to be displayed on your site. If you don't know who will be the primary organizer, you can choose that one of the user registered at your site will be used to be that in each event. If you want to use as organizers other users of your site, you'll have to add them as secondary organizers, but they cannot be the primary ones. For each event, you need to create a new group of your friends from within the Hello! Web Group
